

Constitution of the Global Campaign for Education

Adopted by the World Assembly on November 18 2018

Introduction to the Constitution

Preamble

GCE, which was established in October 1999, is a constituency-based movement that brings together a broad alliance of actors to campaign for and defend education rights. Its membership comes from diverse self-governing national and regional education coalitions, teacher unions, international NGOs and networks, and children's and youth rights organisations. It unites civil society across over a hundred countries in the common pursuit of the right to quality free public basic education for all. GCE is an international alliance registered in South Africa as a not for profit association.

Education is a fundamental right as well as an enabling right, strengthening people's capacity to secure other rights. GCE is committed to the indivisibility of rights and to making the case for education as a central responsibility of all States. The fulfilment of the right to education is key to promoting personal development, social and environmental justice, enhancing democracy, building active citizenship, promoting peace as well as supporting more tolerant and equal societies; education helps to improve health, reduces the spread of HIV, empowers girls and women, increases incomes and improves economic growth. Long-term investment in education can be fundamental to the struggle for addressing multiple crises and transforming present paradigms - towards supporting more sustainable human development. But all these arguments are secondary to the fact that education is a fundamental right recognised in numerous international treaties and conventions and in almost every national constitution.

GCE's founding aim was to ensure that the World Education Forum in Dakar in April 2000 would recognise the scale of the crisis in education and result in concrete commitments and viable policies to achieve education for all. The GCE committed itself to tracking the delivery of the six education goals agreed in Dakar, building an international movement with minimal bureaucracy, harnessing the energy of its diverse members. In its World Assembly in 2011, GCE reasserted the Education for All framework and pledged to maintain this movement until the struggle for education rights for all is achieved.

Mission Statement

GCE promotes and defends education as a basic human right and mobilizes public pressure on governments and the international community to fulfil their commitments to provide free, compulsory public basic education for all people, in particular for children, women and those from excluded communities.

Principles

1. GCE is committed to framing the struggle for free basic education for all as a struggle for basic human rights, recognising that human rights frameworks agreed by most governments, represent a commitment to a complex set of education rights that should guarantee quality teaching and quality learning processes and outcomes – for which governments as key duty-bearers should be held accountable.

2. GCE is committed to challenging discrimination wherever this is evident, arguing for equal education opportunities for all regardless of sex, race, location, ability, sexuality or any other criteria which disadvantages one group compared with another. GCE is committed also to challenging discrimination in its own practices as an alliance, in its relationships between members and in the dynamics within its secretariat.
3. GCE believes that the right to quality education depends on good quality teachers who receive fair salaries, have access to professional development and are valued for their work.
4. GCE is committed to supporting the right to lifelong learning – starting from early childhood, supporting second chances to learn and adult learning at every stage of life.
5. GCE places particular priority on inclusive education that reaches the most disadvantaged groups – particularly child labourers, children with disabilities, children affected by conflict, children of migrant workers and minority communities etc – and cutting across these, prioritising the education of girls.
6. GCE believes in the democratic participation of civil society (including teachers and their unions, as well as children and youth-led organisations) in every stage of education decision-making – from appraisal to strategic planning, from policy development to implementation, from monitoring to evaluation. Decision making at all levels of education systems from schools to district to national level needs to be transparent and accountable.
7. GCE believes that transforming the financing of education is fundamental to making sustainable progress, and that domestic financing (based on progressive macro-economic policies, tax justice and a fair allocation of 6% of GDP to education) needs to be matched with progressive policies by donors (harmonising their efforts in line with Paris/Accra/Busan) and by challenges to the IMF and World Bank where these institutions undermine investment in quality public education.
8. GCE is committed to secular education – so that education processes - open children’s minds to different ways of seeing, understanding and believing.
9. GCE believes that, progress on education rights is best secured through public provision by governments and challenges commodification, privatisation or public private partnerships where these threaten equity in education and quality education for all.
10. GCE seeks to transcend the North-South dichotomy, recognising that there are challenges to equity and education rights everywhere. We seek to make links where possible between challenges in one country and challenges globally, building solidarity and mutual understanding between all countries
